in its consolidated might of big Powers was to protect small, weak States!" he declares. He asserts that what was possible in 1918 is impossible now when the armies fave melted away, and concludes:

"Surely the awful prospect of the final must appeal to the great American people, who for generations have worked so hard and promised so much to help American press and the American representatives who during the war and the peace conference most passionately pleaded for a league of nations to protect the weak peoples in the East. belief of the world was that whatever other task the Republic undertook, the mandate to save Armenia would be her obvious duty. Now an internal dispute come to reject that and every European
